1. READ THE TEXT:

Today's teenagers are often told: "Things used to be different when I was young." So how were things different? What did their grandparents use to do?

Life has changed in many ways in the last fifty years. When the grandparents of today's teenagers were young, they didn't use to be as free as young people are at present. After school they often had to help their parents in the house because, fifty years ago, modern inventions like dishwashers and washing machines were not common.

Not all families had a television, so teenagers probably did more sport and spent more time outside with their friends. Their contact with nature was closer and they were more familiar with different types of plants and animals.

Today many teenagers spend their free time on their mobile phone, listening to CDs, surfing the Internet or playing computer games.

You might think that life is better for teenagers in the twenty-first century and, in many ways, it is. But maybe not everything is better... Magazines are full of articles on how to look, what to wear, what to eat, what not to eat and how to get a boyfriend/girlfriend. Teenagers want to have the "right" clothes, listen to the "right" music and have the newest mobile phone, so it's not surprising that they often feel stressed out...
